Do the glossy pages of Vogue make you weak in the knees? Do you stomp every sidewalk like it's a Milan catwalk? Do you have "the look"? If you answered yes, then you just might want to be a model.

The world of modeling has something for everyone. There are so many niches and specializations that you can find at least one that fits your look and personality. Once you decide becoming a model is the right move, it's time to choose which path you'll take to get there. There's a lot more to the modeling profession than being really, really, ridiculously good looking.

Getting started as a model is no easy feat. It takes time, dedication, and probably most importantly, thick skin. For many, being judged based on your appearance can be taxing, but with the modeling industry becoming more body-inclusive, more opportunities are opening up for aspiring models of all shapes, sizes, genders, and sexual orientations.

While modeling often gets glamorized in the media, when we actually sit down and take a look at what it means to be a model and all that goes into building a modeling career, it becomes clear that the meaning of modeling is quite complex and in-depth.

A woman with long, dark, wavy hair is posing against a solid tan background. She is wearing a black, long-sleeved, ribbed dress with a V-neckline. Her right hand is resting on her chin, and her left arm is crossed over her waist. She is looking directly at the camera with a slight smile. She is wearing gold hoop earrings and red lipstick. EDITOR'S LETTER

Everyone wants to look good and some definitely want to flaunt it too. Modelling today is not restricted to the ramp alone. Whether print, product promotion or ad films, all fields demand good looking models to complement their products.

The fashion industry is one of the most polluting industries, and one of the most energy and raw material intensive. For this reason, and in spite of the tenuous advances that are already being introduced, 2025 will be the year in which companies will have to leave their promotional and advertising initiatives to three, replacing them with really significant actions that will even exceed what consumers are already demanding today. In this way, the definitive transformation of the industry towards a new sustainable model will be promoted.

In May 2024, French fashion designer Eric Tibusch unveiled his 'DARE' collection, marking a significant return to the Paris fashion scene after nearly a decade in China. This collection challenges traditional fashion norms by blurring the lines between men's and women's attire, promoting a fluid and versatile approach to style. Tibusch's designs feature asymmetrical hoodies, trench coats with silicone drips, and bomber jackets adorned with chains and crosses, embodying an urban and contemporary aesthetic. The 'DARE' collection reflects Tibusch's commitment to empowering individuals to embrace their uniqueness and express themselves boldly, resonating with both today's youth and the dreamers of yesterday.

Always working with impressively talented people, beautiful and original, showing that you can travel without boarding a plane to embark on a ship, that your work transcends borders and that these allow you to be eternal. That's why I'm fighting, that I want now if I board those flights and sail those seas, to conquer these squares and so be able to build more editorials, work on more campaigns and continue telling stories through the models that pose for my lens.

In increasingly diverse scenarios, with garments and designers, with make-up artists and assistants, with comfort and discomfort, with sun or rain with heat or cold, where there is some light there, we can compose and propose every day bold photographs, much more elaborate, that break schemes and say that fashion photography is not perfect, that my photography is and will be irreverent, but with purpose and concept, not an empty one that does not communicate, A photograph that contributes to the brands and my clients, to my models and collaborators, that more and more places and landscapes, that more and more faces and their expressions accompany me.

SERVICES OFFERED BY PHOTOGRAPER ALEXANDER ALEJO
